Rebecca MacKinnon, Vice President, Global Advocacy, Wikimedia Foundation

„The Wikimedia Foundation is grateful for this award. Every day, people around the world turn to Wikipedia for reliable information, which is created and moderated by a global community of volunteers. This open, community-led model is why the platform has become the go-to place for people to learn anything online. Upholding the right to safety for the editors who make this model possible is critical to building a reliable knowledge ecosystem. For many years, the Wikimedia Foundation has worked to identify risks and provide editors with the support they need to protect themselves. We remain committed to safeguarding the wellbeing of contributors who continue to add, review, and improve information on Wikipedia to keep it reliable and reflective of multiple perspectives.“
